April Meeting: There has been a schedule change for this month’s program due to several factors. We are very pleased to have Jean Rhyne, State Park Interpreter I, from California State Parks, Tehachapi District, Mojave Sector, as our guest speaker, Thursday, April 12th at the Wanda Kirk Library in Rosamond.

Jean will be presenting information about Tomo-Kahni State Historic Park, located near Tehachapi. Tomo-Kahni was the winter home of the Kawaiisu people from the Great Basin area.

The Kawaiisu were peaceful hunter-gatherers, who roamed from the Tehachapi valley to the mountains and even the desert to gather supplies in order to survive the winter. They were known for their woven baskets. It is believed that they came to the Tehachapi area up to 1,500 years ago, as no artifacts are more than 1,500 years old and most are less than 500 years old.

In 1853, the U.S. government began to relocate natives of the area to the Sebastian Reserve at Tejon Pass, planning for them to become farmers so they would be self-sufficient. When they could no longer live as they were accustomed to they were slowly assimilated into white society.

Many people don’t know about this California State Historic Park, created in 1993, and Jean will be sharing about Tomo-Kahni and the Kawaiisu people and talking about the tours which are only available in the spring and fall. Due to the delicate nature of the site, private tours, led by trained state park volunteers, are the only way to visit this unique park.

Jean Rhyne has been a natural and cultural history interpreter in the California State Parks of the western Mojave Desert for 12 years. She leads tours, coordinates the volunteer programs, and wears many other hats! She began her career in 1997 in the Monterey area, after getting her BA in Biology at UCSC. She grew up in the SF Bay Area, and now lives in Lancaster with her husband and twin 8-year-old sons.

The following is a story of how the Kawaiisu came to eat acorns, chia, etc.

“Coyote was thinking one day and realized there would be many people. Bug was worried that there would be too many people and they would have to eat dirt. Coyote said no, for if they did, they would eat up all the dirt. So Coyote decided The People should eat acorns, pinyon, chia and deer.”

This and much more information is available from the website at: https://www.parks.ca.gov Under “Visit A Park”, look for Tomo-Kahni.

Much of what belongs to the historical society has been stored at Gretchen’s and we are not even sure what all is in there. It could be very interesting to say the least.
