October Meeting - The Kern Antelope Historical Society is pleased to announce that Clifford Greenleaf Burton will be our guest speaker on Thursday, October 11th, at 5 pm at the Rosamond (Wanda Kirk) Library. Cliff G. is the son of H. Clifford Burton of Burton Bros. Tropico Gold Mine and Mill and became the president of the corporation upon the death of his father in 1949. Even though Cliff now lives in the San Diego area, he continues to be involved with the mill at Tropico and still makes trips to oversee activities there. Make plans to attend this singular occasion to hear Cliff Burton recalling events about mining, Tropico, and early Antelope Valley history.

The following article is taken from Antelope Valley PIONEERS, available from KAHS.

Burton Family in Antelope Valley

In January 1900, William Morris Burton, his wife Millicent (Milly) Botwright Burton, and their children Sidney, H. Clifford, Cecil F. and Alec G. came to the Esperanza area (west of Lancaster) from South-End-On-Sea, England. Milly died the following December and is buried in the Lancaster Cemetery. William had purchased the Antelope Valley land from an ad he had seen in the English magazine, Field & Stream. The ad told of a land of paradise on the great California desert with its abundance of flowing artesian wells. There were many flowing wells, but the ad neglected to mention that the land was in the hard-pan-alkali belt and not too well suited for farming. William and the young men made a gallant effort to farm their new land, but without much success. William is credited as one of the first to use a gasoline engine to pump water from the underground valley water basin, and is said to have introduced Lucerne Grass (alfalfa) to Antelope Valley.

After Mrs. Burton passed away, William was kept busy with caring for the four young boys, seeing to it that they did their chores and getting them off for their schooling at the nearby Del Sur School. After a visit to England, William brought to Antelope Valley, a second wife, Maggie Grant, and a second family was started. They eventually had 8 children.

In time, William decided to move his growing family to Mission, B.C. Canada, but H. Clifford decided to stay and follow up on his new interest in life – gold mining. He had become interested in this new venture when he made a prospecting trip to Ballarat with an old desert prospector.

While in Ballarat, Cliff met another young man, Mel Sanford, and together they prospected and made their first “Strike. (The Gold Bug.) They were able to sell it to January Jones, a prominent mining man from Goldfield, Nevada. With his new capital, Cliff went to Los Angeles and studied assaying and facets of the mining profession.

Cliff returned to Antelope Valley about 1910 and started work at the Tropico Gold Mine, near Rosamond. The owners were impressed with Cliff’s knowledge and judgement and soon made him superintendent. The mine needed more ambitious young men and Cliff wrote for his brother, Cecil F. in Canada to come back to Antelope Valley and join him in his ventures. Besides their regular mining jobs, the brothers leased one of the back veins and soon struck a good lode of ore. They began to buy stock in Tropico.

World War I interrupted their plans for awhile and both brothers joined the U.S. Army Engineering Corp. and were sent to France. They returned to Antelope Valley as U.S. citizens. Eventually, after many years of hard work and good judgement, they became sole owners of what is now called Burton's Tropico Gold Mines. They had started a “Custom” gold processing mill and eventually sent to Canada for their brother, Alec who later became mill foreman.

In June 1922, Alice E. Greenleaf (also see Covington-Dearborn Family) graduated from Antelope Union High School and in August H. Clifford took her for his bride. In December 1923, a daughter Dorene M. was born and in January 1925 a son, Clifford G. arrived.

In 1920 Cecil F married a young woman, Leona, that he met at San Jose while he was taking his Army training there. They had a daughter, Vivian in 1926.

Leona and Alice were of great help to their busy mining husbands. They worked at running the hoist, keeping books, selling dynamite and caps and many other chores on the surface, so that the men could do the underground and heavy work at the mine and mill. Times were tough for gold mining until the mid-thirty’s.

Cliff became very active in the community life of the Valley and the Burton Brothers were credited with being one of the main sources of keeping Antelope Valley going during the depression years. They trained farmers (who could not sell their crops) how to become miners, and they gave jobs to many others in need, as they just couldn’t see people going hungry when the mine was beginning to prosper. They also helped the local school keep going by furnishing gasoline, bus maintenance and other supplies to the school system at no cost.

In 1948, during the California Centennial year, Clifford was featured in several magazine and newspaper articles as being one of California’s most successful miners. While Cecil’s family moved from the Valley when the mine was forced to close by order L-208 during World War II, the H. Clifford Burton family remained, although by then they had a home on Lido Isle at Newport Beach, where they lived a short while with H. Clifford commuting. The two children continued their education in California higher institutions of learning and returned to Antelope Valley upon graduations.
H. Clifford Burton passed away in 1949, two years after his brother Cecil F. H.C. B (H. Clifford) had been attending an Antelope Valley High School Board meeting in Lancaster, of which he was an active member. Young Cliff G. took over the presidency of Burton Brothers’ Inc. Tropico Mines and their holdings and with the help of his sister Dorene and her husband, Glen A. Settle (who she married in 1948) kept the mine operating until 1956. Cliff G. and family left the Valley at that time, so he could follow his mining profession. He returns often and continues in the presidency of Burton Bros., Inc.

Dorene and Glen, along with George and Doreen Burton McNamee obtained a lease on the Tropico and opened the mine for tours so visitors could see a genuine historic gold mine and mill. Doreen McNamee was the daughter of William and Maggie Burton and though born in Canada, returned to Antelope Valley when quite young, married and lived at Tropico Mine until her death in 1982. Encouraged by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, the mine gained international notice and for 20 years the Settle’s staged the World Championship Gold Panning Contest. From 1975 to 1979 the World Championship Chili Cook-off was held at Tropico with the Settle’s taking an active part.

Both the Settles have been very active in community life for many years. In 1959 they founded the Kern Antelope Historical Society, with Glen as its charter president. Now (1983) Dorene is president. Dorene was not only one of the presidents of the Lancaster Woman’s Club, but was charter president of the Rosamond Woman’s Club. Both have been awarded with many honors by County and State officials. In 1973 Dorene was listed in World Who’s Who of Women, a London, England publication.

Alec’s son, A. Cecil and his wife Dorothy live in the Rosamond area. His career centered at Edwards Air Force Base. In retirement he is busy working various mining claims, assaying and raising some stock.
60th Anniversary Fun Facts - October

The Kern Antelope Historical Society has some great books which contain a lot of interesting history about our local area. In Gold-Fever - 40-Years Digging Antelope-Valley History we learn the story of the founding of the Historical Society through the first forty years of ‘digging up the history’ of the valley. This section will include nuggets of information each month that have been ‘dug up’ from the KAHS books we offer for sale.

See if you know the answers to these questions:

Question: Eventually, after the Tropico Mine ceased operations in 1956, Glen and Dorene Settle began a museum and operated tours through the mine. In 1976 they were asked to provide mining relics for the __________ __________ __________, a part of the Bi-Centennial Celebration.

Question: Who was the first president of the Kern Antelope Historical Society?

Question: What family, from Prairie City, Iowa was one of the early pioneer families to the valley (about 1888)? Their freighting business didn’t take off, so they moved to Los Angeles and were much more successful, but their son left their LA home as a young teenager, returned to the Antelope Valley and worked on cattle ranches, eventually saving enough to purchase 9000 acres in Oak Creek Canyon.
